Regarding Development of System Tool That Enables Test Acceptance through Other Makers' eChart

Electronic medical chart (eChart) is now spreading rapidly among Japanese medical institutions. In the case of asking second opinions, introducing hospitals, requesting tests and other cases, however, exchanging these information takes time and effort when it's done among eCharts produced by different makers, and this makes some point out the underdevelopment of information technology.

In view of the above and from the standpoint of both patients and medical institutions, we have developed a system tool that enables acceptance and reporting of tests even if medical institutions use eChart systems by different makers (hereinafter, "this system")<sup>(Note)</sup>.

In this system, when a test is requested by eChart, a barcode label is automatically output for person in charge of blood collection just to put it on the blood collection tube. This will reduce the workload of filling out on the blood collection tube and will be effective in miswriting prevention as well.

This system is scheduled to be released this summer. Prior to this, test data has already been linked both between this system and FALCO's eChart "@homeDr." , and eChart system produced by Sanyo Electric Co., Ltd. We will gradually promote data link with other eChart makers as well.

We aim to introduce this system at 5,000 medical institutions in the next five years for free of charge, as we consider it an accompanying function for our group accepting laboratory test.

There will be no additional expense incurred by introduction/installation of this system.

<sup>(Note)</sup> Development and sales of this system is under the name of FALCO biosystems Ltd., a subsidiary of FALCO SD HOLDINGS Co., Ltd.
